Non-discrimination and equality principles in EU Law:

Note: Owing to the relative brevity of this module, the principles of non-discrimination and equality will not be considered in particular detail and are not expected to be known in any significant detail by students for the purposes of this module. Students should, however, note that both of these principles constitute important legal elements in the EU's commitment to human rights protection. Whilst this module to some extent addresses the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, as applied in its various contexts in EU Law (such as the free movement and citizenship provisions), it does not explore how the principles of non-discrimination and equality have been crystallized in other contexts, such as prohibitions against discrimination on grounds of sex, sexual orientation, religion and age. For those students interested in pursuing research in these areas, a suggested selected reading list is provided below:
